The House Of Mystery

By Neil Fannin Hutchison

There is a house of mystery in Coffee County. It is the long abandoned old place in Wood Grove, remote rural community. In its palmy days, it was the home of the late Mr. Hutchison. Today it is a place of legend and mystery. The approach from the roadside is a space of lowland and sage grass. A mother of muscadine vines and the myrtle trees and branches of the dying crape jasmine bushes point blackened fingers at the sky. The door stands open now, like the gaping mouth of a toothless creature. Above it bulges the bearded brow of the eaves, heavy with decay and covered with moss and clumps of fern. The main room is of round logs, puncheon-stripped. The roof is of hand-riven boards. All of it wreathed from the native forest, like the walls of a cave. The door is of hand-riven boards. All of it wreathed from the native forest, like the walls of a cave. The door is of hand-riven boards. All of it wreathed from the native forest, like the walls of a cave.

Someone had removed the jars of preserved foods that Miss Bobbie left in the kitchen cupboard, but there was a bucket of moulded "cracklings" hanging among the griddles back of the ornate "Super" cook stove. The wooden barrel, its bottom scraped thin, sits on a barrel top. The spilt basket is ready to go to market. The eaves, heavy with decay and covered with moss and clumps of fern. The main room is of round logs, puncheon-stripped. The roof is of hand-riven boards. All of it wreathed from the native forest, like the walls of a cave. The door is of hand-riven boards. All of it wreathed from the native forest, like the walls of a cave.

Perhaps it was respect for the departed awe or fear of the large rattlesnake reported to keep downy watch there that caused the house to remain uninhabited for years. But one must enter to see if the stories told are true: that on the day Miss Bobbie, last remaining resident, went away to make her home elsewhere that she put the house in perfect order. That she covered the soft feather beds with her bright patchwork quilts, topped by her snowy handwoven counterpanes.

Was the rocker still in the chimney corner, the two wheels of the dishes set out for a meal? They were ancient, much worn when a few curious persons, braver than others, have invaded the state chambers and upon their neat precision. The contents are still there.

Why, no one knows or ever knew, except the Deas, "who were a little eccentric and never talked much" according to old settlers. The mother died first, later the father. Nine of the boys and girls drifted away to set up homes for themselves and left Ky and Miss Bobbie, brother and sister, living there for many years. Finally pellagra took Ky and Miss Bobbie stayed on alone. Time wore on. All the brothers except one were dead. One day the few remaining relatives paid Miss Bobbie a visit.

Food that have high pellagra-preventive value are yeast, milk, wheat germ, lean meats, liver, cod, and green vegetables, peas and peanut meal.

"I firmly believe," said Director Dunn, "that the least violated law is the one best understood and I want to have a man talk with every retailer personally and explain the rules and regulations of the ABC Board and the laws of public decency laid down by the brewing industry.

"For I know that when the retail beer dealer knows and understands the laws he will obey them."

Retailer meetings have been held at Mobile, Enfield, Sheffield and Birmingham, and others will be held soon elsewhere.

The retailers at these meetings gave a rising vote of appreciation to Director Dunn, and pledged themselves to conduct law-abiding, clean and inviting places, and meet their public responsibility.

HIGH SCHOOL MUSIC CLUB MET LAST WEDNESDAY

Misses Mary Will Kendrick and Jean Rhodes were joint hostesses to the High School Music Club on last Wednesday afternoon in the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Kendrick. Baskets of lovely pink roses decorated the apartments.

In the absence of the president, the business meeting was presided over by Sybil Rowell. Final plans were completed for the club's banquet to be given on April 24th.

Week, the club planned to give a MacDowell program in chapel, at which time a Music Lover's Encyclopedia will be presented to the High School library. Last year the club gave a History of Music to the library.

The lesson on The Netherlands and Norway was discussed by Mrs. Phil Crigler. An interesting program of music by Norwegian composers was given by Eleanor Brunson and Mary Will Kendrick.

In a musical contest, Olive Ray Kendrick won the prize for high score.

A delightful salad plate with real tea was served by the hostesses. They were assisted in entertaining by Mrs. T. T. Rhodes and Mrs. J. W. Kendrick.
